Concept Note

Research is an essential component of academics for socio-economic, political, cultural and industrial development. It's essential to find the solution to the problems we are facing in our day-to-day life, therefore research in all sciences-natural, social, humanities, medical, engineering management, law etc. have been a focal point under the UGC and University's research program. Hence every university has a regular program in research in different discipline and award Ph.D. degree in that domain.

Similarly, research in the domain of law under various specialisations like Constitution, Corporate, Criminal, Family law, etc, are being undertaken. Apart from traditional laws, there is one more evolving area in law i.e. Intellectual Property (IP) Law. The number of Researchers opting this field is comparatively less than other traditional laws. In the technology driven economy, there is a need for more research in the field of Intellectual property rights (IPR) for the promotion of innovation and creativity, trade and investment, health and hygiene, biodiversity-environment and sustainability. When India is moving towards five trillion dollar economies, towards third economic power in the world, the innovation and research in patents, copyrights, trademarks, design, integrated circuits and lay out designs, along with community intellectual property (Biodiversity ,Plant Varieties And Farmer's Rights (PVFRA), Traditional knowledge, Geographical indications, Biotechnology, Agriculture and IP rights) are the grey area for research. Despite the National IPR Policy launched in 2016 by the government of India, momentum towards creativity, innovation and research in IPR is quite slow. The researchers don't want to opt this domain. Hence this colloquium endeavour to attend such issues involving research in IPR to find out ways in the interest of academics, scholars, attorneys, policymakers, industries and society.
